T. R. IS OFF AGAIN ON EXPLORING TRIP FAR DOWN SOUTH

Big Crowd Greeted Him at Pier
as He Leaves for South America.

TAKES RAP AT BARNES.

"Just Another of His Natural Lies," He Says in Answer to Question.

Col. Roosevelt started at 1 o'clock this afternoon for his conquest of the flora and fauna, as well as the human aspects of South America, with a broad grin on his face and the parting shot that Boss Barnes in Albany was a "natural liar."

Whether it was the contemplation of tracking the timorous bul-bul to the den or the idea of stabbing one more little spear into the side of the Republican leader that caused this happy smile, the newspaper men could not learn. But the Colonel's radiant disposition and his wildly waving black felt hat were the last things visible as the Holt liner Van Dyke passed down Buttermilk Channel, bound for Buenos Ayres.

OTHERS GREET HIM AT THE PIER.
The Colonel trundled down to the pier at the foot of Montague street, in Brooklyn, in a black limousine car, accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt, his cousin, Miss Margaret Roosevelt, and Frank Harper, his secretary. A big crowd had gathered at the dock to greet him, and when his machine rolled out under the wharf shed about a half hour before calling time a tremendous cheer jarred the eases of human hair gears and Holland cheese lining the path to the gangway.

That gangway was no place for a heavy man; it was too steep. When Col. Roosevelt, after seeing that the numerous trunks of his party were safely in the slings and swung into the hold, essayed the steep ascent he puffed and snorted prodigiously. "Looks as if I were beginning my mountain climbing early," he shouted to those who applauded his efforts.

MEN OF SCIENCE WITH THE COLONEL.
Other members of the Roosevelt party besides Mrs. and Miss Roosevelt were G. K. Cherry and Leo L. Miller, scientists sent to accompany the Colonel through the Amazon jungle as representatives of the American Museum of Natural History; Anthony Fiala, the one-time Polar explorer with the Ziegler expedition, and the Rev. Father John Augustine Zahon, provincial of the Order of the Holy Cross.

Col. Roosevelt, commander of the Van Dyke, met the distinguished naturalists at the rail and shook his hand heartily while the crowd on the dock applauded. Then the Colonel and Mrs. Roosevelt went to their staterooms, which were filled with flowers and fruits.

BARNES.
When Col. Roosevelt greeted the newspaper men he was asked about the record.

SLAIN BABY'S MOTHER DECLARES HER CHILD DIED AFTER WHIPPING

Mrs. Salerno Tries to Explain That
Her Child Fell and Struck
Head After She Had Chastised It.

TRAPPED BY DETECTIVE HOVERING NEAR FLAT

Young Woman Said by Her Mother to Have Eloped With Man Who Is Sought by Police.

Mrs. Louise Salerno, a tall, pretty woman, a blonde of the German type, is being detained in the Bronx Detective Bureau, attached to the Morrisania police station. The golden-haired little girl whose body was removed from the flat at No. 700 Fox street, the Bronx, yesterday to the Harlem Morgue, was identified early this afternoon as the woman's daughter, Lulu, two and a half years old.

Mrs. Salerno has told the police that the child fell and struck her head against a door and that later Mrs. Salerno found her dead. But the police are looking for Tony Fishel and for a man who said he was Joseph De Puma, but is another man well known to them, the police say, as a Black Hand leader, a cadet and a notorious gunman, with whom Mrs. Salerno lived in the Fox street flat.

It was Fishel with whom Mrs. Salerno eloped five weeks ago, abandoning her husband and two young children, and it was the pseudo De Puma, who, at the point of his revolver, forced Mrs. Salerno, an undertaker, to remove the small body from the Fox street flat to the Harlem Morgue. Capt. Sam Price to catch the man. He is equally sure of getting the man who calls himself De Puma, who, he says, is well known to at least half a dozen of the twenty-five detectives who are on the case.

Late in the afternoon the real Joseph De Puma, walked into the Morrisania station with his brother James. The latter said he had read his brother was wanted and had advised him to go to the station and explain it was a case of mistaken identity, or some one using his name intentionally. De Puma, who lives at No. 240 East One Hundred and Ninth street, said he spent yesterday and last night there and had never been in the Fox street flat, had never seen Mrs. Salerno and did not know Fishel. Mrs. Salerno agreed the man was a stranger to her.

IDENTIFICATION MADE BY BABY'S GRANDMOTHER.
The apprehension of the young mother followed closely the identification of the child, which the police kept in the Harlem Morgue while they sought the men they believed to be the little girl's murderers. It was Mrs. Louise Salerno, mother of Mrs. Salerno, who made the identification. Brought by the newspaper stories to the Harlem Morgue, Mrs. Salerno recognized the little face of the child and a string of beads she had worn at once, but the sight of the child's discolored face and blackened eyes unnerved her.

After she had regained her composure somewhat she said her daughter had never seen Fishel, an employee in the Columbia College barber shop of the young woman's husband, Michael Salerno, and had taken the little girl with her. The grandmother had lost all track of the child and Mrs. Salerno understood the real of the little girl's death and recognized the name of De Puma that of another employee in the barber shop of her son-in-law.
